(North of Mass Pike)

WORKSHOP DESCRIPTION

Using case presentations with commonly encountered clinical aspects, present how treatment would look different in the following 4 systems:

1. VA clinic,
2. Military clinic,
3. CMHC clinic, and
4. Solo clinician.

Should there be a guideline of universal treatment recommendations and structure?

If so, what would be the common elements?

Should there be a core competency training for clinicians? What aspects of treatment are incompatible with military employment?

Cases will be created to outline examples.

LEARNING OBJECTIVES

1. Introduce participants to military cultures, traditions, and courtesies
2. Understand the Judge-Advocate-General regulations regarding drug and alcohol use and abuse among active and reserve military components
3. Learn how past and recent trends of drug and alcohol use in the military differs from national trends
4. Understand how recent drug and alcohol trends in the military contribute to recent suicide rates in the military

TRAINER

Dr. John Rodolico is presently the Deputy Commander for the Massachusetts National Guard Medical Command. He has given numerous presentations, group consultations and trainings on substance use disorders, motivational interviewing, military culture, combat PTSD, military suicide and resiliency. He has extensive experience with adolescent addiction that spans over 30 years. After completing his post-doctoral work in addiction psychology Dr. Rodolico has been committed to using evidence-based treatments to help people with addictive disorders across the life span. He has participated in numerous randomized clinical trials as both a supervising clinician and therapist. His many areas of research including motivational psychology, evidence-based treatments for dual diagnosed patients, epidemiology of addictive disorders and combat stress injuries. Dr. Rodolico also has an extensive teaching history over the past two decades, supervising clinical psychology interns, post-doctoral fellows and child and psychiatry residents.
